

Queen's Building

The building was opened by HM The Queen, and by Her Majesty's special permission it is known as 'The Queen's Building' – a unique honour for a collegiate building in Cambridge or Oxford. When she declared the building open Her Majesty described it as “introducing a new design into an ancient setting”

A venue for all occasions

The multi-purpose Queen's Building, situated in the heart of Cambridge is a venue for all occasions – from a major symposium for up to 150 delegates or a concert or play in the imposing Auditorium to the more intimate surroundings of the Timmy Hele Room and the Seminar Room.

The semi-circular Harrods Room at the top of the Queen's Building is one of the most interesting meeting rooms in Cambridge with its panoramic vista of the city to the west and the splendour of the Fellows' Garden to the east.

The Auditorium can be hired on an hourly basis for up to three hours – ideal for shorter events such as an Annual General Meeting.

All three floors are serviced by a lift and there is Internet connectivity throughout the building. There is also an office in the building for the use of conference organisers.

The adjoining Old Library makes a splendid and contrasting venue for a refreshment break or conference lunch.
